SPAIN

The general elections for Representatives are the most relevant for the voters, measured by turnout. "The referendums or popular consultations, put into practice only four times in the last 40 years have generated a n average turnout of 61.37%."

The author addresses the different types of political participation in the Spanish political system from an analytic perspective, dividing the essay in three main points: definition of political participation, political participation in Spain, and, finally, other participation means in the Spanish political system.
