Learning to Live with Others

In the last few years the problem of violence among children in schools is one that has been socially installed. It can be said that this cases of violence are not an isolated phenomenon and that its roots are found in social ingrained habits and that schools are a key space in the teaching of habits and pacific or violent conducts. Understanding the concept of citizenship works as a guide to approach the concept of living together from equality and inclusion. Living together means accepting everyone that surrounds us, knowing that we are all different. If the objective is to look for a culture of peace and coexistence, beyond of their education level. Participation allows: maintaining a dialogue with others, share knowledge and ideas that are transformed into actions.
